Ernest Hemingway was one of the great American writers of the twentieth century. He was born in 1899 as the second of six children. His family was strict and very religious. His father taught him a love of nature. Ernest caught his first fish at the age of three, and was given a shotgun for his twelfth birthday. His mother taught him a love of music and art. At school, he was very good at English and wrote for the school newspaper. He graduated in 1917, but he didn't go to college. He went to Kansas City and worked as a journalist. He learned a lot, but he left after only six months to go to war.

Hemingway was fascinated by war. He had wanted to become a soldier, but couldn't because he had poor eyesight. Instead, in World War I, he became an ambulance driver and was sent to Italy, where he was wounded in 1918. In the 1930s, he became a war correspondent in the Spanish Civil War and World War II. Many of his books were about war. His most successful novel, 'For Whom the Bell Tolls' was written in 1940 and is about the Spanish Civil War. His another book, 'A Farewell to Arms', is about the futility of war.

His personal life wasn't so successful. He married four times. His first wife divorced him in 1927. He immediately married again and moved to Florida, where he enjoyed hunting, fishing and drinking, but he also suffered from depression because, in 1928, his father committed suicide. Two more marriages failed and he began to drink heavily.

He was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1954.

His final years were taken up with health problems and alcohol. He began to lose his memory and he couldn't write any more. In July 1961, he killed himself with a shotgun, just as his father had done before him.
