III. Reading

The Little Match Girl

It was New Year's Eve. A little bare-headed, bare-footed girl was strolling around the streets with packets of matches in her hand. Her fingers were numb in the cold, she didn't have any gloves and tried to make the sleeves of her jacket longer to hide her hands in them, even for a moment. The girl was starving. No one had bought matches from her, so she did not dare to return home, her father would beat her.

She found a place where she could rest and pulled one match out. When it burnt with a bright flame, she smiled and imagined a warm stove. She tried to warm her hands. After a few moments, she held a burnt-out match in her hand. She decided to light a new one. After that, she saw a table with a delicious roast goose on it. When the match burnt out, the picture disappeared. She took another match from a packet and lit it. This time she saw her late grandmother. The girl saw her quite clearly and distinctly. Her grandma looked beautiful. She was the only person who was always kind to the girl. The child didn't want her grandma to disappear, so she hastily struck a whole bundle of matches, everything that she had. Later, a passerby found a body of a little girl, frozen to death on New Year's Eve.
