WORKING ANIMALS

A lot of people have pets at home. They treat them as family members. Some animals spend their life working for humans.

For example, in India, elephants move enormous trees for people. They push and pull things with their trunk, so they work hard. Donkeys aren't as strong as elephants, but they can carry other lighter things for people. In the north of Canada, huskies pull heavy sledges on the snow.

Pigeons can be people's messengers. They have a good memory. They know where they live and how to return home.

Dogs are intelligent. For instance, they learn how to look at the traffic and guide blind people. They also have good noses. The police can use them to find drugs at airports.

In the past, there was a dog, Laika, who went into space. Laika went into space in November 1957 to test the safety of space travel for humans.

Rats are small rodents that are often used in science experiments. Thanks to them people now know a lot about diseases and drug effects.
