III. Reading

Nowadays, people buy lots of clothes. After some time, they are often bored with their old outfits and give them to charity or leave them in recycling banks.

While Diana Simons, a charity worker in England, was clearing out her wardrobe, she came across a beautiful blouse. It was expensive, but she had never worn it. It was too small for her. She decided to take it to a recycling bank to give it a new life.

She left the piece of clothing in the recycling bank outside her local supermarket. After some time, the recycling company collected all the clothes from the bank and sent them to headquarters in Leicester. Then, workers checked all clothes carefully. They decided to send blouses with other clothes to Africa. They packed all the clothes into containers, and a lorry took them to a ship. The journey of clothes began.

After seven weeks, the ship with clothes arrived at the port of Beira in Mozambique. Then, some parcels with clothes started their journey to the capital of Mozambique, Tete. That was not their final destination. After some time, they were sent to the town of Chipata in Zambia. Zambia, an African country, lies next to Mozambique.

There are people in Chipata who trade clothes. Khalid and Mary, local traders, bought a container of clothes which came from Europe. It contained lots of blouses, skirts. There was Diana Simons' piece of clothing among all the clothes.

Then Khalid and Mary put all the clothes on the market stall in Chipata. One day, Priscilla Msimuko, a local teacher, saw the blouse and bought it. She paid $3 for it. She was glad.
